By Elizabeth Smith I George Doyle / Stockbyte / George Images The sound of a Skype session is greatly improved with a headset that includes a microphone and a headset: headphones eliminate the possibility that the person who speaks will listen to her words echoing back and the microphone helps isolate the sound of the user's voice. If you use an Apple iPhone headset with a built-in microphone, you may experience connection problems due to settings or compatibility, as not all devices can accept the microphone input. By choosing the correct Skype and Device Device settings, you can test the compatibility and configure the devices properly. When connecting headphones to your computer or mobile device, Skype recognizes them automatically as headphones. As the microphone does not require a separate cable, Skype may not immediately register as an audio input source. If you are not sure if your microphone works, make a test call in Skype. Start Skype and search "Skype Test Call", "Echo / Sound Test Service," or "called Skype Test (ECHO123)" in your contacts. Call the contact, follow the instructions to register a message and listen to playback. If you do not hear the audio, it is likely that you need to change the audio settings on Skype or Computer. Before Skype can recognize the online Apple microphone, you need to adjust the configuration. On a Windows machine, open Skype and choose "Audio Settings" from the Call menu. In the microphone drop-down box, choose the input of the Apple headset. To test the audio input, talk in the microphone and watch the volume indicator. If you do not react to the sound of your voice, the computer may not be compatible with the Apple headset. On a Mac, choose "Preferences" from the Skype menu and click on the "Audio / Video" tab. Make sure your headset is selected in the microphone field and speaks in the microphone. If the volume indicator reacts with the green bars, your headset is completely functional. If your mobile device is compatible with Apple headphones, it will automatically recognize the microphone: If you don't, your voice will simply be inserted via the phone's microphone. Although the headphones have been designed specifically for Apple devices, they do not work on all generations. Headphones work on all devices, but the first generations that support the online microphone are the fourth generation iPod nano, the iPod Classic, the second generation iPod touch and the iPhone 3GS. All subsequent devices support the microphone, along with all iPad models. If you use Skype on a computer, you need to configure to accept the Apple microphone as an input device. On a Windows computer, open the control panel and click "Hardware and Sound". On the Sound tab, click the "Recording" tab and make sure the Apple microphone is selected. If it does not appear in the list, the computer may not be compatible with the Apple headset. If you use a Mac, click on the Apple menu and choose "System Preferences". Connect your headset and click on the "Sound" icon: If the Input tab has an external microphone list, your earphones are ready for sound. A few weeks back, we discussed the best headphones you can buy, this week we want to take the conversation directly into your ears and discuss the best earphones.
