Last year, housing builders built almost 7,400 single-family houses, surpassing The year before by almost 1,000 homes and most since 2005, according to the data compiled by the Keystone report for Housing First Minnesota, a trade group that represents Twin Cities builders. The multifamily construction lowered slightly compared to the previous year. She said the beginning of the It caused an unprecedented demand for entry level moving buyers, as well as for the first time in twin cities. As the prices of new homes have fired throughout the state in the last time, Minnesota legislators have sought to address the scarcity of home start. "A deceleration in the rhythm of the new housing construction is not a trend that we want to see But it is not surprising with the problems of the supply chain, a shortage of labor and an unfavorable general regulatory environment in our region. "David Siegel, Executive Director of First Minnesota homes in a statement". The problem of supply and demand, regulatory restrictions, labor shortage, shortage scarcity and supply chain problems are added to a very challenging market so that builders exceed to meet the needs of our Housing consumers, "said Polipka. Leach said that with mortgage rates are expected to increase no more than 3.5% by a fixed rate mortgage at 30 years, he expects many of the same forces that gave way to the market in 2021, including a strong demand together with labor and supply limitations, it continues well in 2022. The developers planned to build about 2,700 new units, most double, more than double, than in Lakeville, who saw the second highest number of units in the subway. There is weakness in the office sector, but the growth in industrial construction, led by distribution centers and warehouses for Amazon and other large national companies. While the builders thrown hard to obtain units initiated in 2021, the work and supply restrictions caused a delay in the closures. According to the data compiled by the Keystone report for housing, the first Minnesota, in February, permits for new single-family homes fell by 17 percent, with 432 allowed units that apply for development compared to the year last. Large Multifamily that include 17 units or also rejected 60 percent in the number of units allowed to the year after year. However, the small multifamily construction was the only sector that saw growth, with permits thrown by 129 units, an increase of 118 percent compared to with of the past year. Dodge Data and Analytics recently said that during the first 11 months of non-residential construction in the 13 counties subway exceeded the previous year in only 9% compared to an increase of 32% in residential construction, which almost He divided between a single family and multifamily. "The scarcity of homes for sale in the twin cities and the demand for new homes has now reached a level that we have not seen before," said Todd Polifka, the president of Housing of 2021 for the first time in Minnesota. These challenges made it even more difficult for housing builders to make houses more affordable, especially for those who buy their first home or personal reduction.
