Inforcove, Amatul (2019) Nursing care for Hematemesis Melena customers with peripheral perfusion is not effective at the Dahlia Jombang Hospital Pavilion. Diploma thesis, university of Pesantren Darul 'Ulum. Full text not available from this repository. Summary Hematemesis is defined as blood vowing and is usually caused by superior digestion disease. Melena is the exit of black feces per rectal that contains a mixture of blood, generally caused by proximal intestinal hemorrhage. Most of the case of Ematemese Melena is a state of the hospital that causes 8% - 14% death in the hospital. Gastrointestinal bleeding can attack everyone and all groups. The design of this study uses a case of study, which is a method for studying or investigating an event using the phase of the care process from both cases of Melena hematemean customers with ineffective peripheral peripherals. The results of the care on both hematemous clients, obtained peripheral perforated problems is not effective in relation to a decrease in hemoglobin concentration on both clients. The management is to stop bleeding by providing hemostatic groups, giving blood transfusions, and rinsing stomach acts are performed. There are differences of causes of Hematemesis Melena in both clients. Customer 1 is due to the wrong model / lifestyle, ie drinking coffee, smokers, how to eat instant spaghetti, like spicy eating and harsh food. While the causes of Hematemesis Melena in clients 2, namely due to complications of hepatic cirrhosis. After the actions of peripheral perfusion problems are not effectively resolved characterized by growing levels of hemoglobin, normal vital signs, CRT
