On a roll after releasing the "Sick Boy" of January, February "You Owe Me", and March "Everybody Hates Me," The Chains jumped in the spring season on April 20, 2018, with the release of "Somebody". As their ever-built album continues to become bigger, with "Somebody" we are treated to a prudent tale of fame and excess that fits easily with the previous three songs. But don't be fooled by thinking that this is a carbon copy of the previous content of the duo. This is how "Somebody" strikes its cord and captures a new mood to constitute its goal for the realm of radio and dark dance clubs and teguila-drenched. You can first notice a new voice that shares the chaos microphone. Another Drew graces our ear waves with Drew Taggart. Drew Love, or "Trap Bobby Brown" as it is known as on Instagram, is the R&B-meets-trap singer who hit on an audio gold plate with G-Eazy on "Love is Gone" and with Zhu and Skrillex on the "Working for It". Together the two Drews merged with Alex Pall to navigate listeners through the right path and betrayer to riches that aims to take a piece of you along with it while climbing higher in the presidential suite of popular opinion. With an alternative rock-meets-pop flavor embedded in their dance vibrations, the host star Drew Love sets a fake sugar to the infectious chorus: "In the city full of luxury cars and crowded bars and supermodels It looks exactly the way it did inside my head When I dreamed of everything I could live without me I need it now because I'm all around me Only what I can't afford is to lose Tryna be someone." We examine these highly visual texts that remain simple enough to memorize and sing together. That "the city" in question is Los Angeles in great, or is the nearby neighborhood of the entertainment industry recognized worldwide as Hollywood, "fashion car," "crowded bars," and "supermodels" captures the prominent panorama of the modern celebrity nature. You can imagine a young Alex Pall, Drew Taggart, and Drew Love look at popular music videos, watching in subjugation as vixens prance video around in a neon-flooded disco jungle with exotic luxury vehicles parked outside. Chainsmokers could also be stand-in for any singer or day rapper ready to fast forward in the fast lane of this race towards glamorous opulence. The smart part of the choir is that the texts recognize that these typical standard success signs are still "all the things I could live without", and that are more desires than they are necessary. They do not fall under the essential categories of food, clothing and shelter, but are firmly stuck in the mind of the duo due to constant reminder of their alluring force of attraction thataround them. trapping can be Playing a traumatic game of identity policy and voting for an image of aliases, instead of what comes most naturally to you, can deflate your ego fast. Being "some" isn't always all that is cracked to be, especially if the artist is what all cracking up in the process. Speaking of cracking, but in a positive way, Drew Taggart cracks towards an open wide singing: "You should have known better than listening to your heart again people change with time (you know, just know what I like) I don't really like anyone. So don't tell me I'm like anyone else you put it together. Don't let people fall again change with time." These words express the difficulty of trusting your instincts, as you become "someone", as people around you turn from a support system to alienated foreigners. The pain and pain that is a direct side effect of having your time absorbed by execution and registration can ask you questions if it is worth trying to fill that void by reinvesting your time absorbed by execution and registration can ask you questions if it is worth trying to fill that void by reinvesting your time absorbed by execution and registration can ask you questions if it is worth trying to fill that void by reinvesting your time absorbed by execution and registration can ask you questions if it is worth trying to fill that void by reinvesting your time absorbed by execution and registration can ask you questions if it is worth trying to fill that void by reinvesting your time absorbed by execution and registration can ask you questions if it is worth trying to fill that void by reinvesting your time absorbed by execution and registration can ask you questions if it is worth trying to fill that you would have aged for the rest of your life. The goals and priorities of people move, and being caught in the crossfire of a love loss can lead to the feeling of: "I don't really like anyone." Verse two runs towards one through a new filter to pass the point of view from "you" to "I": "In my head I knew better (in my head I knew better) I don't blame her on my guilt I know I should forget it (you know, just know what I like)." Whoever The Chainsmokers is trying to forget makes this moment in the song much more personal. It also shows how easy it is to guess your beliefs when the famed train is rubbing you through the world at the speed of light. Overall, you are able to feel a more triumphant atmosphere in "Somebody" than the previous three 2018 singles of The Chainsmokers. There is less dark anger, but this does not erase a single piece of their edge. If the listener is simply fascinated by what has to be like turning into a star at their workplace, or is a musician willing to do something that is ready to become clay in the hands of the entertainment industry, "Somebody" is a wake-up call.
