On March 7, 1927, the trustees of the Houston Independent School District (HISD) Board of Education unanimously passed a resolution authorizing the establishment and operation of a junior college. The middle school was run and administered by HISD.[22][23] Originally, the HJC was located on the campus of San Jacinto High School and offered only evening courses to train future teachers at the junior college; freshmen were not allowed to enroll. A more accurate date for the official opening of the HJC is September 19, 1927, when registration was opened to all persons who had completed the necessary educational requirements. [25] The first president of the HJC was Edison Ellsworth Oberholtzer, who was the dominant force in the creation of the junior college. [22][26] The UH held its first classes at San Jacinto High School in 1934 at the beginning of college. The law. On April 30, 1934, the Board of Education of HISD passed a resolution to make the school a four-year institution began on June 4, 1934 at San Jacinto High School with an enrolment of 682. It would become one of the main arteries on campus. As a project of the National Youth Administration, workers were paid 50 cents an hour to clean up the In 1938, Hugh Roy Cullen Memorial Building was inaugurated on June 4, 1939, and classes began the following day. The first full semester of classes officially began on Wednesday, September 20, 1939.[25] In a year after the opening of the new campus, the university had about 2,500 students. As World War II approached, enrolment declined due to the draft and enlistment. In the fall of 1943, there were only about 1,100 regular students at UH, so the approximately 300 military personnel helped to support the faculty and structures of the Engineering College. This training at UH continued until March 1945, with a total of 4,178 students. [31] On March 12, 1945, the Senate signed Bill 207, which removed control of the University of Houston from HISD and placed it in the hands of a board of regents.
