What is the message of the poem ulysses

By Chelsia HartApril 21, 2014 In a World Called Perfect by Heidi N. Franz-Hoyt In a world called Perfect, everyone gets along money grows on trees, and we never get sick. In a world called Perfect, no one ever gets tired, or hungry, or old. In a world called Perfect, everyone is happy, no one is sad, and memories never fade. Unfortunately, we do not live in Perfect, we live in Today. Where people don't get along, money is hard to come by, and we do get sick. People do get tired, we do get hungry, and we do get old. Everyone is not always happy, some people are sad, and our precious memories can fade. No matter what world you live in, just remember – you are 'Perfect' in my world! Heidi N. More literally, it is about the hyphen that separates the birth date and death date on a tombstone. Within the poem, the speaker recalls a man who gives a eulogy at a funeral. The man mentions the dates that the person was born and died, and he then says that those dates are not as important as the dash in between them. According to the poem, the dash "represents all the time that they spent alive on Earth" and that "what matters is how we live and love and how we spend our dash." The dash is a metaphor for the life that humans live. The poem asks the reader to think about his life and whether or not he is living it the way that he wants. Within the message of the poem, the speaker reminds the reader that life is short and that it can end at any moment. The eighth stanza tells the reader that "this special dash might only last a little while." It then ends with the ninth stanza asking if the reader will be proud of his dash when the time comes for his eulogy to be read. The message of the poem is to not waste any time and to live life to the fullest. Poems for a friend who has died include "Epitaph on a Friend" by Robert Burns, "By Herself and Her Friends" by Joyce Grenfell and "I'm Free" by Janice M. Fair-Salters. Chapter 3 of the Bible's Book of Ecclesiastics, titled "A Time for Everything," is also referenced as verse for bereavement. It's often difficult to find the right words when one has lost a dear friend. Poems often offer sentiments that grieving loved ones may find difficult to formulate themselves. Poems like "Between the Clouds" by Gemma Lang put into words the overwhelming thoughts and feelings of tragically losing a friend. Poems that insist individuals don't mourn deceased friends can also be useful. Verses like "Don't Stand at My Grave and Weep" by Mary Frye and "Don't Cry For Me" by an anonymous author encourage mourners to view their deceased loved ones as still with them. "Do Not Go Gentle" by Neil Astley is a book of bereavement poetry that may be useful for individuals mourning a friend's death. While some compositions may be designed with the loss of specific types of people in mind, such as a mother or father, they may be applicable to the loss of a friend as well. My daughter received an e-mail as part of an e-mail list she didn't belong on. She didn't know why she got this message, but forwarded it on to me. "Thought you should know," she said. The e-mail writer (and sender) was my beloved friend Helen from my California days. I loved her the first time I met her, and after some years and crazy circumstance, she ended up across the street from me. We made each other laugh every day. This message that Helen had sent to her family (and mistakenly to mine) was about her Mom. Her Mom was living in a retirement community and had taken a fall. She was then moved to another facility and it has been traumatic for her. Helen was trying to prepare for the next step. "...unless Mom takes a turn for the worse and that is up to God and Mom..." she wrote. Does any of this sound familiar to any of you? I know Helen's mom. I love her just like I love Helen. And here they are again, years and miles away, doing the Mom-specific equivalent of what we are all doing here. Designated Daughters are all over the country, all over the world, and whether we know each other by name or not, we feel kinship. So, readers, let's welcome good old Helen, doing what has to be done. D.G. Fulford is the author of Designated Daughter: The Bonus Years with Mom, written with her mother Phyllis Greene.
