ConditionretchingspecialtyGastroenterology nausea (also known as dry undulating) is the reverse movement (retropéristalsis) of the stomach and esophagus, without vomitus. [1] It can be caused by bad smells or asphyxia, or by withdrawal of certain medicines, or after voicemites was concluded. Nausea, it can also occur as a result of an emotional or stress response, which produces the same physical reaction. The function is thought to be mixing gastric contents with intestinal reflux so to tap the previous and give it impulse in the preparation of vume. [2] Treatments include the medication and correction of the balance of fluids and electrocloths. Physiology The stage of effort to vomit is characterized by a breath of violent abdomin-toracicle spasmic contractions with the glottis closed. During this time, inspirations (by inhalation) movements of the wall of the turbidity and the diaphragm are opposite by the contractions expiratory of the abdominal musculature. At the same time, the movements of the stomach and its contents take place. Considering a patient will complain about unpleasant sensations à é à € - during the nausea, the speech is not possible while vomiting. Featured movements provide a ready-made diagnostic sign of the retching phase. Schindler (1937) [3] studied effort to vomit on two occasions during gastroscopy and noted that longitudinal folds appeared in the previously softening antrum, thickened quickly, gathered and completely closed from the den. [4] Retching involves a deep inspiration against the closed glottis. This, together with the abdomen contraction, leads to a pressure difference between the abdominal and toric cavities. As a result, the contents of the stomach and gaps are displaced up to the toracicle cavity. [5] SUSEA comprises a rhythmically alternated alcádo (about once per second) and descending of all pharyngolaryngolary-esofago gátrad in sync with the motion of the diaphragm. The function of the nausea may be to mix the gastric content with intestinal reflux to tamper contents before the gastroesophageal reflux and to give a pulse to the gático contents before vositos. Airway Protection during the nausea is performed by closing the glottis during Rhighes and Building of the upper esophagic spheric between RheRches. [2] VERSÚS VIMITOS VYMITIS (the expulsion of the gatric content) is usually preceded by nausea, willingness to vomit and vume, but may occur separately [6] and involve different sets of muscles. [7] During a vomit, toracic pressure is reduced and increased abdominal pressure, which may serve to position gátric content and overcome esoplastic resistance. [6] On the other hand, a vume occurs with the increase of the toracic and abdominal pressure. Rhe and vines are usually grouped into behavioral analysis and, consequently, neural controls for these processes are not well outlined. [8] Treatments Treatments for significant nausea include fluid and electrometer equilibrium correction, nutritional support and medicines such as phenotiazines (such as compazine and phenergan), 5-HT3 antagonist (such as Zofran), dopamine receptor antagonists (such as reglan), anti-histamins (antivert, and dramamine, benadril) and anticholin (scopolamine). Alternative approaches are also available. The best studied alternative therapy is perhaps the use of acupuncture for pregnancy-related and vicitual nurses. [Carece de fonts?] Bracelets with acupuncture buttons are available commercially. A device implanted with electrodes connected to the gatric wall can be an option for patients with refractory usuals and vines.
