The original Donegal city was organized by the Court of the County of Chester in 1722, and was one of the two townships that composed the Lancaster County at the time of its erection in 1729. On 24 June 1838, a division was carried out , so the old township was established in two townships, to be separately and distinctly recognized as East and West Donegal. The settlers of East Donegal were from Scotts-Irish descent and there were mainly farmers who were attracted to the area from rich lands and abundant ceilings. So the abundant products provided by the earth were able to be transformed into flour by the many mills that jumped into the area. The first settlers, Arthur Patterson and others, organized a presbytery church in Donegal in 1726, and erected the old church building at that time. The first three shepherds came from Scotland. Bartram Galbraith, James Galbraith's grandson, was the lieutenant for the County of Lancaster, the first three years of the revolution, and many members of that family are served in various official positions, as well as Alexander Lowrey and many of those familiar. The borders of township, as defined at the time of the division, are north by the joy of Mount, north-east of Rapho, east of West Hempfield, south by the Susquehanna river, west of Conoy and West Donegal. Along the eastern boundary flows the small torrent chiques and the actions run. The main settlement in the village is the village of Marietta. We do not intend to deduce that there is no relationship defined between the township and the district, as the latter has a distinct municipal government in addition to any connection with the first, but occupies the land previously belonging and located in the city of eastern Donegal, and therefore we will incarnate the Appropriate history of Marietta in the same, since we even stories of numerous needs in the townships from which they were their sites respectively.
