Jules Verne Around the World in Eighty Days is a story of RIP-ROARING adventure set primarily in Victorian England, but spans the world after its protagonist Philase Fogg. Written with a cosmopolitan and open view of the world, around the world in eighty days is a brilliant tale. Live in their descriptions, Fogg, a cold and frail man, who slowly shows that he has the heart of an Englishman. The book beautifully captures a spirit of adventure that was hubbling around the turn of the century and is impossible to get down. The story begins in London where the reader is introduced to an incredibly precise and controlled man by the name of Fogg. Fogg lives happily, though somewhat mysteriously because no one knows the true source of his wealth. He goes to his knight's club every day, and that's where he accepts a bet to travel all over the world in eighty days. He packs his things and, together with his maidservant, Passepartout, gets on their journey. At the beginning of his journey, a police inspector starts walking him, believing that Fogg is a bank robber. After a reasonably smooth start, difficulties arise in India when Fogg's realities that a train line he hoped to take is not finished. He decides to take an elephant instead. This detour is fortunate in a way, because Fogg gathers and saves an Indian woman from a forced marriage. On his journey, Fogg falls in love with Aouda and, on his return to England, makes her his wife. However, in the interim, FOGG faces a number of challenges, including the loss of Passepartout to a Yokohama circus and being attacked by Native Americans in the Midwest. During this incident, FOGG shows its humanity by personally going out to save his gentleman, even though it could cost him his gamble. Finally, Fogg manages to return to British soil (although leading a mutiny aboard a steamer And apparently in enough time to win your bet. At this point, the police inspector arrested him, delaying him. Delaying it. long enough to lose the bet. The model inspired me more. I also have some art nouveau books on my shelf to make me humor. CA: How long did each stage last and how was the biggest challenge? JP: Initially we thought we had five weeks and wanted to create incredible things. The deadline changed and, from that moment, we moved quite fast. So I finished the series in 10 days. The biggest challenge, for me, was that it could not touch the model. Meaning of the face and the body had to remain intact and very visible. That was complicated. I felt restricted, creatively, and it had to find a way to express myself within this restriction. Another thing was that I had to work on one or two images a day, going back to them later to adjust and adjust. So there was no time to go back to see it really. In addition, due to the distance between New York and the Hague, we could not know and see the images together, unfortunately. But we had intensive contact between us which was great. CA: How did you get in the design? JP: I got into the design by accident à € "destiny. I would say. Seven years ago I needed a website for my films and I thought it would be better to do it myself. A friend and I got to work and RocketClowns was born. CA: How would you describe your style? JP: I think I'm still under development, in terms of style. My obsession with illustrative art began in 2012 and there are many things with which I want to experience within the middle. CA: What or who influences and inspires? JP: Inspiration I Get from the photograph, the music and the deepest layers of human nature. It could be a book, a movie, people and life in general. I need visual entry before you start, when there is no concept or idea in the first place. So far I have been too lazy to think about terms of concepts and I just wanted to create and be in the flow.
