Read on to learn how to make local backups of android phone data. phones withFor those of you who are rooted, most likely have installed custom recovery, as well. Most custom recoverers have a backup and restore function. The most popular custom recovery, ClockworkMod Recovery, or even TWRP Recovery, for example, makes backup of Android phone data extremely easy. Launch in recovery mode and create a NANDroid backup (usually through the Backup and Backup menu). This allows you to back up all your phone data on your SD card. You can also try using a tool called Online NANDroid Backup that allows you to create NANDroids even without having to restart your Android device in recovery mode. Some users recommend that you be more careful and copy the entire Nandroid backup file to your computer so you never accidentally delete it. It is a wise precaution, and one that we highly recommend, too. If you need to restore the Nandroid backup you have already copied to your computer, copy the Nandroid folder back to your SD card, start in recovery mode and select Backup and restore > Restore. Titanium Backup Another option for rooted Android users is Titanium Backup. If you are unfamiliar with this application, Titanium Backup is one of the most powerful tools for Android – and when we say powerful, we are not exaggerating. Titanium Backup gives you direct access to your system and it can be an error portal for some incurring users. If this is your first time running it, make sure you read it at least twice. Once the app is launched in the Backup/Repair tab and click the Menu button on the phone. From the menu that appears, select Batch. In the next menu, click [RUN] Backup of all user applications + system data. You can choose to back up only user apps and system data, but you can choose a complete and total backup of your phone. Depending on how much of the phone you chose to back up, the initial backup process can take anywhere from a few minutes to half an hour or more. Just like a Nandroid backup, you can choose to copy the backup file on your computer. Navigate to the /Titanium Backup directory on your device's SD card and you can find backup there, ready for storage. When you want to restore backup, you can enjoy the same Batch function. Select menu > Batch. In the Backup/Restore menu, scroll down to find the recovery options. Titanium Backup is available on Google Play Store. Titanium Backup ★ root for Android on AppBrainPhones without root MyBackup ProMyBackup Pro works not only on rooted phones, but also on unrooted phones. Once you have this application on your Android device, launch it and tap Backup. It gives you the option to back up your apps or data.
