The screening rooms vary in size I think 1st & 10 are the big screens as well as some have new seats othes notOh yeah those that work the concession are slower than a snail in molasses in the winter! Need to put a fire under their asses! so it's a toss up. Tuesdays is discount dayVery comfortable sitting. Great surround sound.Now that we have an Alamo Draft house here there's no need for this Ghetto place. I only go when there's a ton of movies I want to see and not enough money for a 2nd & 3rd movie! Alamo is MUCH better!It's near my house and convenient! love going to this place with my Bf anytime to go see a movieYou can now move the arm restNice and quiet in an early Saturday afternoon.Never long lines for tickets and they move fast when ordering food.Be careful. You might trip over an unsupervised child running around the theatre.Tiny screens, but I love playing the claw games if I get there earlyGreat sound... Dirty ladies room.Armrests don't move. Seats are tight. Not wheelchair accessible friendly, 2 empty spaces in 3rd row. I can't walk, not blind. Terrible.Coming to the midnight show here is not a good idea if u don't want to be surrounded by teenagers / high schoolerstickets are cheaper on TuesdaysPlace needs to upgrade their seats!New seats!!!! The arm rest goes up now!!This place needs an update asap. Horrible seats and small theaters.Not the best Theater, but free Parking. More food than many other theaters.Screens are rather small. Never realized until recently.Goo!f theater but u can't move the arm rest but yeah free parkingBiggest dump of a theater. Avoid at all costs if possible.Theater #7 has a small screen. Sucks!! consider their medium popcorn a small. It was done in a few minutes.Sahanesin bebegim byle devam et Admission is $20 per car. This content is for Westfair Online members only. Eyerman/Life Magazine/The LIFE Picture Collection/Getty Images Tired of Netflix? You aren't alone, but escaping the house still requires some caution due to the COVID-19 pandemic. Fortunately, some companies and individuals came up with a creative idea to help people safely enjoy a night out: drive-in theaters. That's right — outdoor movie venues are no longer a thing of the past. They're a fun answer to the problem — at least for the foreseeable future. Even as theaters and concert venues reopen, drive-ins have a lot to offer people who are feeling stir-crazy but also uncomfortable about going out in public while the virus is still spreading. Some drive-ins that have opened up have even worked to upgrade the cinema experience by offering more than the chance to watch great movies. Concerts and other outings provide extra entertainment opportunities at select locations. These venues serve as a refreshing reminder that social distancing doesn't have to be boring, and you can still go out with friends if you take the right approach. Ready to say goodbye to your couch and say hello to fun at the drive-in? Here's a deeper look at how drive-ins are thriving during the pandemic. For some movie lovers, the old-fashioned drive-in experience wouldn't cut it anymore, even in desperate times. This is where the brand-new experience comes in. Several revamped drive-in locations offer movies and a view, which makes it harder to pass up. For instance, Skyline Drive-In NYC provides patrons a movie with the lovely Manhattan skyline in the backdrop. It's not a mundane NYC skyline either; it's a popular filming location for well-known companies like SNL and Converse. Photo Courtesy: Skyline Drive-In NYC When it comes to food, some drive-ins are turning to fancy food trucks and onsite culinary options that far exceed the appeal of popcorn and candy. At Letty's Alley and Eats, you can order crab wontons or bruschetta as an appetizer and move on to an entree like roasted frenched chicken breast or crab cake sandwich — all while enjoying a great movie. Some aspects of the outdoor cinema experience are the same, but there are some subtle changes. Many drive-ins have modified their ticket purchasing process, for example, requiring all tickets to be purchased online through the company's website or Facebook page. However, you have to be quick at many locations. Tickets are in hot demand and sometimes sell out in minutes. One problem business owners still face for now is access to brand-new movies. Without the permission of movie studios, drive-ins can't show the latest flicks, but this situation has already started to improve with new film releases picking back up at the end of August. Older movies like Jurassic Park, Grease and Dirty Dancing have done well in drive-ins through the summer, so we may see a blend of new, old and recent movies like Crazy Rich Asians and Mary Poppins Returns playing at drive-ins moving forward. For those who love music but are a little sick of social media live concerts, businesses have found an innovative solution to your problem: drive-in concerts. Germany got the trend started by hosting a few drive-in rave concerts with all the works — DJ performances, lasers, smoke, special effects and dancers (wearing masks, of course). Although people aren't allowed to get out of their cars to dance and mingle, they can party inside them and even honk to the music. Photo Courtesy: Hauke-Christian Dittrich/picture alliance/Getty Images In the U.S., many music artists have jumped on the bandwagon and hosted small drive-in shows. One of the most popular stars to jump on this trend is country singer Keith Urban, who surprised fans in Tennessee with a spontaneous drive-in concert in May. That's not all — the singer dedicated the show to front-line medical workers. Besides requiring online ticket sales, business owners have implemented other safety and social distancing measures to ensure everyone safely enjoys the entertainment. Most drive-ins have the same set of regulations, such as requiring patrons to stay in their cars, except to use the restroom. If you leave your car, you must wear a face mask, and each car must be parked 10 to 20 feet away from the next car. Some venues stagger car spots, so everyone can easily view the movie screen or performance. Also, only a certain number of people are allowed in the restroom at one time. Of course, you can expect a few troublemakers who don't want to follow the new rules, but you can also expect those customers to be kicked out. Photo Courtesy: Dastril Roszandi/NurPhoto/Getty Images If you're wondering about food and drinks, many venues are trying to keep the experience contact-free by encouraging patrons to bring their own snacks and beverages to give both customers and workers peace of mind during the pandemic. However, those who want snacks at some locations can order items online for contact-less car delivery or pick up. For instance, food trucks at Miami's Carflix Cinemas deliver food to customers' vehicles while they watch outdoor movies. Houston's Rooftop Cinema Club allows customers to pre-order food and drinks online for onsite pickup. Thanks to drive-ins, people have the chance to leave their homes and have some fun together (while still apart) during these challenging times. How's that for some movie magic?
